9 New Beauty Devices That Bring The Spa And Salon To You

Celebrity facialist Melanie Simon is famous for her $2,000 Chemistry Facial, a treatment that uses electric current to help firm the muscles on the face and plump skin. Now, after 10 years of development and testing, Simon has distilled the treatment into a little saucer-shaped device. Use it (along with the included conductive gel) to pass electrical current over your neck, jawline, cheeks and forehead; the sensation is so mild, you'll wonder, "is this thing on?" According to Simon, if used for 12-minutes, twice-a-week, skin tone may go from ruddy to rosy and dull to plump over time. And while, this sleek little number isn't cheap, it's a relative bargain, compared to a session with Simon herself.
